the 1990s, the number of people in the UK with a long-term condition has increased by 50% (Department of Health 2000). The prevalence of long-term conditions is also increasing in other countries (e.g. Australia, Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, Taiwan, USA) (World Health Organization 2002).

Long-term conditions are those that are chronic, recurrent, or persistent, and are not cured by treatment. They are often associated with disability and may be life threatening. Long-term conditions are often managed by a range of health professionals, including general practitioners, nurses, pharmacists, physiotherapists, dietitians, and psychologists. The management of long-term conditions is often complex and requires a coordinated approach. The management of long-term conditions is often a long-term process, and it is important for patients to be involved in their own care. . . . I am the graduating senior . . . I leave you, Croton Point High School, with just a little pang of regret that I didn't think I would feel . . . My careless happy days at high school are gone—never to be recalled save only by some memory . . . Never again may I race the bell through the corridors of my school, for no longer is it my school . . . never again may I stand at the sideline and yell and cheer for my team, for no longer is it my team . . . never again may I bungle the junior play . . . or fight for victory on the gym floor . . . never again may I go to my teachers for advice or guidance, or tingle with pleasure at their praise, or sting under their criticism . . . or taste the wine of victory or achievement or the knowledge that I did well . . . or burn the lights of my room cramming for a final exam . . . or whirl to the music of my school orchestra . . . or strain and sweat over prom decorations, or dance and laugh under the finished product . . . or worry about the empty treasury . . . or flirt . . . or know the singular warmth of a schooltime friend . . . All that ended when they handed me my diploma there that night of Commencement—ended forever . . . Yet the very word means not finish—but beginning . . . This diploma is four years of my life . . . Yes, I leave that life, but I go to enter a new and even greater world . . . Now in the springtime—the time of awakening life—I too awake and rise to its challenge . . . unregretting, unsorrowing, eager . . .

and a privilege to make the photographs which appear in this issue of the Annual, and we know that in the years to come these portraits will be among your most cherished possessions.

But school pictures, important as they are to us, are only one of many types of portrait work we do. Only recently we completed a new camera-room and work-rooms. With these facilities — and new equipment as well — we have ample space for the largest wedding parties or other groups.

We would like to show you our new place; we think it fully on a par with the studios in much larger cities. Won't you come in and look around — at your convenience? There's no obligation at all.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased by 1.5 million (1990–1999) and is projected to increase by a further 1.5 million by 2010 (Office of National Statistics 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to develop strategies to meet the needs of the ageing population. The Department of Health (2000) has identified the need to develop a new paradigm of care for the ageing population, one that is based on the concept of 'active ageing'.

The concept of 'active ageing' is defined by the World Health Organization (WHO) as 'the process of maximizing the opportunities for health, participation and security in old age' (WHO 1999). The WHO (1999) has identified three key components of active ageing: health, participation and security.

Health is defined as 'the state of well-being of an individual, not just the absence of disease or infirmity' (WHO 1999). Participation is defined as 'the ability to take part in the life of the community' (WHO 1999). Security is defined as 'the ability to meet the basic needs of life' (WHO 1999).

The WHO (1999) has identified a number of factors that influence the process of active ageing. These include: health, education, income, social support, and participation. The WHO (1999) has identified a number of strategies to promote active ageing. These include: promoting health, promoting education, promoting income, promoting social support, and promoting participation.

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are undernourished has increased from 600 million to 800 million (FAO 1996).

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the nutritional status of the world's population. The World Bank (1992) has estimated that the cost of malnutrition to the world economy is $100 billion per year.
